Agreeance with ACM's Codes

After reading the Code of ethics on ACM's website I tend to agree with Jack. The ethics aligned with my personal view but the personal experience with ethics can help make even more ethical decisions. That is because even though ACM's Code of ethics cover a basic amount of ethics, there is a lot of different ethical problems that could happen which is a massive gray area. It is completely up to the person to figure out the course of action when it comes to ethics. Even though Ann is not wrong on the importance of being guided by the ACM's code of ethics, more issues can arise that might not be inside of the code of ethics hence why I agree with Jack more.
